Watchmen Fifty Years Ago.

MUSING EXTRACTS FROM THE RECORDS OF HARTFORD, CONN.—HOW THE NIGHT WATCHMEN DID THEIR DUTY.

From the Hartford Courant.

From the Hartford Courant.

Fifty years age four night watchmen were employed to patrol the streets of this city, and hourly records of their doings were kept. Different details were made, the same watchmen rarely doing duty together ou more than one occasion. Some of the memorandums made are exceedingly quaint, though the most of them certify that "all is well," as each hourly tour between 10 p. m. and 5 a. m. is recorded, and occasionally this voucher is made more pointed by its orthographical announcement "avt is well." It is evident that the size of Hartford in 1819-20 allowed the watch with reasonable vigilance nouncement "aw' is well." It is evident that the size of Hartford in 1819-20 allowed the watch with reasonable vigilance to understand about what was going on during the night season. Men were not then permitted to roam the streets at pleasure, but were stopped by the guardians of the public peace and made to give an account of themselves. Some extracts from the old records will have a peculiar interest at this time, they are so unlike the modern style of police duty. On the night of Dec. 21, 1819, Duniel Colt, Ralph H. Bolks. Henry Myers and Emmons Rudge were on the watch. The records of that night make these disclosures: "10 to 11 o'clock. No disturbance on the pairol. Found Mr. — and Mr. — and another (not known) stopping up the key-hole at the watch-house." "11 to 12 o'clock. Found a salt store open belonging to a Common Councilman, and shut the same." On the following night Ephraim Islam, Charles Butler, 21, Robert Cooledge and E. Rudge were on duty, and they report: "Watch from 10 to 11. Sundry lights in different parts of the city 12 to 1. Saw two persons out with a light homeward bound—one was an honest man; the other endeavored to escape; was slowly pursued and threatened and brought to; found to be Daniel Fish out courting—released." On the night of the 24th Chester Coe, Stophen Page, E. Rudge and Hiram Porter were on duty. They 'make this

Would advise them to clean their walks or get their lives insured. How weary my legs! I am led to exclaim, Poor 'old horse—let him die.' While 'the generality of mankind in general' are reposing on their pillows of down we four miscrable souls are deprived even of a board to attretah our weary limbs ugon, and like Job, curse the day we were born. sidering that the Captain got around in time to take his cider and nut-cakes.

"Hailed a stiff young dandy; found him peevish and cross, and supposed he had been disappointed in his visit. Met another young dandy making for home at half-past one in good spirits; suppose he had better success.

At 3 o'clock saw a light in the north-part of Talcott buildings. In the back room perceived a man sitting by a bright fire on a trunk or bench; hailed him and desired to know if the fire was safe, but received no answer; went around, to thack window and age in requested to know if the fire was safe, but no before received no answer. Watched him for an hour or so, when, concluding him to be deaf and dumb or a fool, we left him, and would recommend to the Hartford Bank to look to their tenants.

All quiet except a few gentlemen who appeared, from their noise, to be at their old and constant calling, gambling, in

N. H. choir, according to their own account."

Hartford has undergone, many changes since these records were written, yet there was probably more crime in 1820, in proportion to the population, than there is at the present time, and much of it was treated more leniently than now, or rather was more generally tolerated. The principal occupation of the watch was to look out for fires and see that pedestrians were not incendiaries or midnight assassins; beyond that the records show but few arrests or detentions.

Those who neglected to prune their grapevines at the proper time, last fall or early this spring, will find it a good plan to disbud them at the present time, or as soon as the buds begin to expand into leaves.
This is done by rubbing off all the budsthat are not wanted to grow and produce wood of fruit branches.

The greatest fault to be noticed about grape-growing in the gardensof those who do not perfectly understand the habits of the vine is the neglect to prune the vines, as they should be, in the right season of the year. After a vine is five or six years old and has become well established, and it is not destrable to increase its size any

Osage Orange Hedge.—A correspondent in Coleman's Rural World, who has had a long practical experience in the cultivation of the Osage Orange Hedge, and urges the economy and utility of raising the same, gives the following:

'My mode of planting and cultivating is: Break and harrow well a strip of ground 9 feet wide; put it in the best of order take a two horse plow, run a deep furrow, throw the dirt to the mound-board all on one side, so as to leave a straight bank to rest your plants against—which leaves the plants standing straight, while setting. With one person to set, and one to follow with a shovel to cover, two fast men can set 3,000 a day, after the ground is prepared. If they are strong, average them from five to six inches apart. Be certain to plant with strong, vigorous plants. For the first two years they should be well cultivated. Use a one horse plow: certain to plant with strong, vigorous plants. For the first two years they should be well cuitivated. Use a one horse plow; use the hoe freely in drawing up the loos; dirt to the roots. If your hedge is an outside one, you may plant a row of Irish potatoes on inside, by the hedge, for the first two years—nothing that I tried is more suitable to its growth. I have raised fine, roops of potatoes in that way, when the ground was 'suitable. A division hedge you may plant on both sides. To succeed well the hedge must have the san and air.

As to the trimming. I believe all agree that the hedge ought to be trimmed in June; after that, I think much depends on the season. I should use my own judgment as to triuming it more than once a year for the first three years. A very important matter is, to head off the top, leaving all the side and lower limbs to make their growth; then I commaice at the top, trim it down in nearly a half sound form bright skine off the noints.

make their growth; then I commence at the top, trim it down in nearly a half round form, birely taking off the points of the lower limbs—this will give you absort from 3 to 3 feet on the surface of the ground, of thick, strong growth, which nothing ein penetrate. This is the most important item in raising a hedge.
